Guilt has defined Luke Dempsey’s life. But it was self-destructiveness that landed him in prison. When his friend and fellow inmate lay dying shortly before Luke’s release, the older man revealed he left a string of clues for his daughter, Finley, that will lead her to the treasure he’s hidden. Worried that she won’t be the only one pursuing the treasure, he gains Luke’s promise to protect her until the end of her search.

Finley Sutherland, owner of an animal rescue center and defender of lost causes, accepts Luke’s help with the treasure hunt while secretly planning to help him in return by coaxing him to embrace the forgiveness he’s long denied himself.

As they draw closer to the final clue, their reasons for resisting each other begin to crumble, and Luke realizes his promise will push him to the limit in more ways than one. He’ll do his best to shield Finley from unseen threats, but who’s going to shield him from losing his heart?

EXCERPT

The bell on the door rang as I stepped into the warm day. Spring had unfolded its gentle arms around Williamsburg, and like any good embrace, it tried to warm my soul and comfort me. Yet little had given me solace lately—both here and in my other path.

I walked with purpose toward the capitol, taking note of the people passing me. As the editor for the Virginia Gazette, it was my job to know as much as possible about the people and the events transpiring in and around Williamsburg. I had to fight to learn the news, since I was rarely invited to the gatherings my male counterparts attended. But no matter how much they learned, I knew so much more than any of them could ever imagine about the events that would soon transpire.

I knew these things because I lived two lives simultaneously—one in 1774 and one in 1914. When I fell asleep in one path, I woke up in the other, moving back and forth, with no time passing in either life while I was away. It had been this way since I was born. But all of that would change on my twenty-first birthday when I would be given the choice to forfeit one path and stay in the other forever.

I already knew which one I would choose.

Brand-New Sweeping Historical Time-Travel Series from Debut Author

- Heroine lives across two time periods and is faced with the decision of choosing one life and forfeiting the other
- Meyer writes for Love Inspired and Guideposts and has garnered a loyal fan base on social media
- Meyer fell in love with history while working at the Minnesota Historical Society, and her stories are rich with historical detail

Libby has been given a powerful gift: to live one life in 1774 colonial Williamsburg and the other in 1914 Gilded Age New York City. When she falls asleep in one life, she wakes up in the other without any time passing. She has one conscious mind but two very different lives and bodies.

In colonial Williamsburg, Libby is a public printer for the House of Burgesses and the Royal Governor, trying to provide for her family and support the Patriot cause. The man she loves, Henry Montgomery, has his own secrets. As the revolution draws near, both their lives—and any hope of love—are put in jeopardy.

Libby's life in 1914 New York is filled with wealth, drawing room conversations, and bachelors. But the only work she cares about—women's suffrage—is discouraged, and her mother is intent on marrying her off to an undesirable English marquess. The growing talk of war in Europe further complicates matters and forces her to make sacrifices she never imagined.

On her twenty-first birthday, Libby must choose one path and forfeit the other forever—but how can she possibly choose when she has so much to lose in each life?

EXCERPT

There was a commotion in the foyer below. A last quick twist of her auburn hair, a couple of pins, and Lillian was ready to join the rest for dinner. Walter was expected, as well as Lemuel and Harrison. She wondered which of them had just arrived.

But as Lillian descended the stairs, she realized the sounds were not a joyful welcoming of guests. Her pace quickened.

"I don't know. That's all they said." The voice was Harrison's, and he was breathing hard. And then Miss Tilly's answer came more calmly. "Where'd ya see 'em, son? How far down the road?" Lillian rounded the corner to the landing, eyes sweeping the foyer. Grace was already throwing a coat around her shoulders, and Ben and Walter were pushing their feet into boots.

"What's happened?"

"Oh, sis, they've gone. The pair of them. It seems they've run away."

Instantly, Lillian knew without asking which of the children would attempt such a desperate act.

"They went together?"

"Yes, yes," Grace answered.

"Stay here. We'll get the car started and search for them."

She paused at the door, turning back to instruct, "Pray for us, please. Pray for them! It's so dark out with the storm moving in. It'll take an act of God to find them tonight."

Bestselling Duo Concludes Series Attached to a Hallmark Channel Favorite

- “The Okes’ novel delves into the plight of thousands of Home Children who were shipped from England to Canada and beyond, from about 1870 to 1930. . . . Heartwarming and inspirational.”—Historical Novels Review on Unyielding Hope
- Millions of fans who watched the companion TV show, When Hope Calls, eagerly await the continuation of the story
- Hallmark has continued to rebroadcast the series on various channels, increasingly expanding awareness and enthusiasm

Lillian Walsh and Grace Bennett have learned so much already about caring for children in distress. It hasn't been an easy task, but suddenly they discover that two of their kids have run away. And, inexplicably, Lemuel has gone with them. Concerned for the trio's safety, the sisters will do all they can to try to find the children.

But the runaways are not the only ones who've put the future of their children's home in question. Father is finally home again—and Delyth has come with him. Lillian herself is faced with choosing between her dreams with fiancée Walter and her commitment to her sister. Steady Ben Waldin is keen to find where his family settled in Canada and to give little Janie a place to permanently call home. Just where that search will take him and what it will require may be more than he's ready for.

As they all struggle to determine their paths forward, each begins to realize that sometimes loving well means making difficult choices.

EXCERPT

Dear Anders and Josephine,

The big news here is the railroad tracks are being laid through Salton and on west. They plan to dig the well this week for the water towers, so Salton will be the first water stop after Lincoln. Building a station is high on the discussion list.

We have an idea—not that we don't have enough work as it is—to build and open a boardinghouse with a café. There is such a need for housing both for those working here now and others who are coming. We thought that since the wagon trains are less frequent, we'd have fewer visitors, but the train tracks are bringing more change. Anyway, we are hoping you will share our interest in a boardinghouse and invest in building materials and the other expenses of opening such an enterprise. Leah's Garden is still our primary interest and dream, but like Lark keeps reminding us, cash flow is critical. My teaching is the only real money we have coming in, and Lark says her purse is thinning down.

I hope and pray that all is well for all of you back there.

Your sisters,

Del, Lark, Lilac, and Forsythia

Master of Historical Fiction Continues Her Winning Formula

- Snelling’s name frequently adorns bestseller lists
- Author’s books have sold more than 5 million copies
- Depicts the story of four Norwegian sisters trying to make a life and provide for themselves on the Nebraskan frontier

The Nielsen sisters have accomplished much in the past year, traveling west and settling in Nebraska. They are on their way to rebuilding their mother’s garden, and their excitement only grows when they receive a letter from their brother Anders saying he’s coming to visit with a friend from the war. However, none of that can mask their concern that they are quickly running out of money. Del’s work teaching in town offers hope, not only to support her sisters but also to better her students’ lives. Not all see it that way, though, with the town lagging on rebuilding the schoolhouse and her brightest student’s father demanding he work the farm instead of learn. An invasion of grasshoppers only makes things worse.

When Anders arrives with his war-wounded friend RJ, he sees the strength of the sisters’ idea to start a boardinghouse with the train coming to town. He invests in it and suggests RJ build it. Del finds RJ barely polite and wants nothing to do with him. But despite Del and her sisters’ best-laid plans, the future—and RJ—might surprise them all.

Still, the shock is nothing compared to the heart-wrenching fear when he learns the woman he loves is at the graduation. Fortunately, his team rapidly ends the shooting melee, and Noah discovers Brooke is still alive. Once assured she's okay, he quickly turns to learning who is behind the attack.

Little do Brooke and Noah know that the shooting is part of a master plot, and that Brooke has overheard something that holds the key to exposing the mastermind's identity. Determined not to be caught, the cunning villain focuses on taking out Brooke and, if need be, those who would protect her. With targets on their backs, Brooke and Noah must race to find the killer before he strikes again.

Isabella toyed with her gloves. "What is it you hope to accomplish, Mr. Bailey?" She met his eyes. "If it's your desire to shame me, I refuse to be moved. I made my choice long ago, and I do not regret it. I love my parents, but I also love my aunt and my life in California. I see nothing to feel ashamed of or guilty for."

"I'm sure you don't." He shook his head. "You see only what you want to see, Miss Garcia. I knew that even all those years ago, when you acted so heartlessly toward your father."

"Me? Heartless? It was he who showed no compassion. He ripped me away from all I loved as a child. Took me from my friends and family. My beloved grandmother and aunt, and so many others." She grew thoughtful. "I was ten years old and didn't understand why I had to leave all that I knew and loved. No one consulted me. No one asked me how I felt. He took us from our home and plopped us down in the middle of the desert. I was afraid and alone." She frowned. "But I don't expect you to understand. You know so much more than anyone else about my family and about me. Go right on judging me to be a heartless woman, Mr. Bailey. I simply do not care what you think."

Reigning Queen of Historical Fiction Keeps Up Series Momentum

After living an opulent life with her aunt for the last few years, the last thing twenty-five-year-old Isabella Garcia wants is to have to celebrate Christmas in the small silver-mining town her father and mother founded in the desert. She’d rather stay in California with the handsome Diego Morales who is courting her. Isabella is further miffed to have to bear the company of Aaron Bailey, a businessman with the Santa Fe Railroad, whom her father has sent to escort her safely home. Aaron finds Isabella spoiled, and she finds him judgmental.

But she is surprised to see how much the town of Silver Veil has grown and how fragile her father’s health has become. Then Diego shows up with news that her aunt has died. Isabella is saddened by the loss of not only her aunt, but also her place of escape.

Faced with all these changes, she struggles to sort through her future and who she wants to be. But trouble is brewing, and there are those who hope Isabella stays just as she is, even if it costs her everything.

But when her grandmother’s will is read, the money left to Allie and her family is barely enough to cover the cost of hiring a lawyer, and worse yet, the property has been sold to a contractor.

With just three weeks until the house and barn will be imploded, a backhoe unearths one of Dale Butler’s best-kept secrets and perhaps a clue to keep Allie’s dream alive. EXCERPT

There wasn't much in life that could knock Marnie Dixon down, but seeing her daughter sit at the kitchen table, head in hands, weeping, did the job. Just the idea of Dawn sobbing made Marnie start to cry. Her friend Maeve always said that mothers felt whatever pain their child felt, only magnified. Marnie jumped up and got a box of tissues to set on the table between them.

Dawn rarely cried, even as a little girl. When she was learning to walk, she would fall, pick herself up, and try again. That was Dawn. Philip used to say that their daughter was born accepting the fact that life would require grit and determination.

Dazed, Marnie rose again and went to get two cups of coffee. She filled them, then remembered they'd run out of coffee creamer. A brilliant idea struck. She opened the freezer and rummaged for a container of vanilla ice cream. She dropped two big spoonfuls of ice cream into both mugs and handed one to Dawn, who peered vaguely at the melting lumps.

"Everything's better with ice cream," Marnie said. She slipped into the chair next to her. "Start at the beginning. Tell me what happened." The timer on her phone went off and she jumped up to take her pain pills. Dawn sat at the kitchen table, watching her with worried eyes. "I'm fine, honey. I really am. This is just a little blip on the radar."

"Mom, please sit down."

Right. Marnie needed to settle. She sat in the chair opposite Dawn and put both hands around the warm coffee mug. "Let's talk about your wedding."

"I keep trying to tell you. There is no wedding."

Award-Winning, Bestselling Author with Nearly 1.5 Million Copies Sold

- Fisher's contemporary romances consistently hit the ECPA bestseller lists
- "Fisher creates a vibrant cast of charming, plucky characters set on redefining themselves."—Publishers Weekly on On a Summer Tide
- Escape into a new series set in a charming town on Cape Cod this summer

Dawn Dixon can hardly believe she's on a groomless honeymoon on beautiful Cape Cod . . . with her mother. Sure, Marnie Dixon is good company, but Dawn was supposed to be here with Kevin, the love of her life (or so she thought).

Marnie Dixon needs some time away from the absolute realness of life as much as her jilted daughter does, and she's not about to let her only child suffer alone—even if Marnie herself had been doing precisely that for the past month.

Given the circumstances, maybe it was inevitable that Marnie would do something as rash as buy a run-down ice-cream shop in the town's tightly regulated historic district. After all, everything's better with ice cream.

Her exasperated daughter knows that she's the one who will have to clean up this mess. Even when her mother's impulsive real estate purchase brings Kevin back into her life, Dawn doesn't get her hopes up. Everyone knows that broken romances stay broken . . . don't they?

Welcome to a summer of sweet surprises on Cape Cod—a place where dreams just might come true.

Head Out on a Cross-Country Pilgrimage in This Remarkable Debut

- An unforgettable story of healing and fulfillment for a new generation of readers
- Will appeal to readers of Sharon Garlough Brown, Rachel Linden, and Erin Bartels
- Lytle is a debut novelist

Mel Ellis knows that her eating disorder is ruining her life. But she can't bring herself to go to rehab so someone else can fix her mess. Broken and empty in more ways than one, Mel makes one last-ditch effort to make hers a story worth telling. She will walk her own road to recovery along the lesser-known trails of the North American wilderness.

Though she is physically and mentally unprepared to face the difficulties that lay ahead, she sets off on foot from Grand Rapids, Michigan, and heads toward Mount Rainier National Park in Washington State. During the long journey, she meets strangers with their own stories, as well as ghosts from her past who can no longer be ignored. But though the land she travels threatens her success at every turn, it's her own dark thoughts she'll have to overcome in order to find peace in the life and the body she has been given.

With pitch-perfect timing and a delightful sense of irony, debut author Autumn Lytle masterfully leads readers on a journey down the hard path toward healing.

If any place on God's earth was designed to help one heal, it is Meadowland. Surely here, at her brother-in-law's Kentucky farm, Rose and her daughters can recover from the events of the recent past—the loss of her husband during the 1918 influenza epidemic, her struggle with tuberculosis that required a stay at a sanatorium, and her girls' experience in an orphanage during her illness. At Meadowland, hope blooms as their past troubles become rich soil in which their faith can grow.

Dirk Meadows may have opened his home to his late brother's widow and her girls, but he keeps his heart tightly closed. The roots of his pain run deep, and the evidence of it is written across his face. Badly scarred by a fire and abandoned by the woman he loved, Dirk fiercely guards his heart from being hurt again. But it may be that his visitors will bring light back into his world and unlock the secret to true healing.

Bestselling author Ann H. Gabhart explores the tender places within the human heart in this character-driven story of trusting God to turn our burdens into something beautiful.

As Elinor follows the clues her grandfather left behind to a top-secret nuclear project, Kekoa has no choice but to step in. When Elinor learns he has been spying on her, she’s crushed. But with danger closing in on all sides, she’ll have to trust him to ensure her discoveries stay out of enemy hands.

EXCERPT

He narrowed his eyes. "Are you flirting with me?"

"Oh boy, you're in worse shape than I thought." She smiled then, her golden-brown eyes alight in the moonlight, and the smell of her, maybe coconut oil she'd used by the pool, and a hint of the salty air, conspired to stir something deep inside him.

Something he'd successfully ignored for the six years of training and deployment.

Maybe yeah, his heart, because there was no room for excess emotion in his job. And he was always on the job.

"But like I said, nothing's happening here." She let go of him and jumped off the retaining wall. "Yet. Tomorrow, when you pick me up for dinner, then we'll see."

She waited near the bike as he ran down to retrieve her satchel and dress. By the time he returned, the sky had started to rumble. She put on the dress, then her satchel.

He climbed on the bike, and she got on behind him. Slipped her arms around his waist. And shoot if he didn't take the long way around the island. It may have been a bad idea because the skies opened up and by the time they reached the Bahama Mamma, they were both drenched, his white oxford plastered to his torso. The rain spilled off the tiki roof into the parking lot and lightning cracked the sky.

They both got off and made a dash for the lobby. He stood, shivering, sopping wet, not quite wanting to leave her, the way she smiled at him. Her dress clung to her body, her hair dark and curly, and he thought maybe she was right...

She had awakened something inside of him.

He just hoped it didn't get him killed.

EXCERPT

She drove as fast as she dared and made it to the courthouse to find local law enforcement on scene along with fire trucks, multiple ambulances, and the FBI mobile command post. SWAT was on standby. Julianna parked, pulled on her vest and windbreaker, and headed for the RV.

When she stepped inside, Special Agent Hector Rodriguez looked up. "Glad you could make it." His dark eyes, normally serious, held a new level of intensity. A neatly trimmed black mustache graced his upper lip, and he stroked it with one finger as he was known to do when stressed or thinking.

"Got here as fast as I could." Julianna slipped on the headset that would allow her to connect with the man holding the judge and a roomful of people hostage. "Do we have eyes?"

"We should any moment now."

"Catch me up."

"This was the Nicholas Manchester trial."

"Ah yes. The guy who hijacked the plane last year and killed six passengers."

"That's the one. Apparently, Nicholas didn't like the guilty verdict. He had a crew on standby, ready to help him out. Complete with masks and tear gas."

"How'd they get the stuff in there?"

"The security footage is still being scanned, but so far, it looks like someone allowed them access to a back door late last night. The perpetrators hid out in the building's mechanical space, and when they got the guilty verdict, they stormed the courtroom. I'm sure we'll be learning more as the investigation continues."

The monitor in front of her flickered and the courtroom scene came to life. Julianna leaned in, processing the visual. She counted. Eleven jurors in the box, seated. Several crying, others with stone-faced fear. Two US Marshals lay on the floor in front of the bench with a woman kneeling next to one of them. Judge Lisa Stevens sat in her chair, staring straight ahead. The man behind her held a fistful of Lisa's chin-length blond hair and a gun aimed at her right temple.

After being forced to kill an FBI agent gone rogue in self-defense while working in the violent crimes unit for the Investigative Services Branch, ranger Madison Thorn is comfortable with her move to the fraud and cyber division. At least numbers don't lie. So she's less than thrilled when a white-collar crime investigation in Natchez, Mississippi, turns violent. She could also do without being forced to work with former-childhood-enemy-turned-inferiously-handsome park ranger Clayton Bradshaw.

When a woman who looks just like Madison is attacked on the same night Madison's grandfather is shot, it becomes clear that there is something much bigger going on here and that Madison herself is in danger. Madison and Clayton will have to work together—and suppress their growing feelings for one another—if they are to discover the truth before it's too late.

BAKER PUBLISHING GROUP has been a member of the Green Press Initiative since 2005. We are proud to be industry leaders, printing 40% of our new books on recycled paper. The first Evangelical publisher to take part in the Green Press Initiative, Baker Publishing Group urges other Christian publishers to take seriously God's mandate to be good stewards of the earth and to join this worthy initiative to spare our forests as we spread the Christian message through our books. For more information on the Green Press Initiative, visit www.greenpressinitiative.org.
